

ABSTRACT

A device and a method for administration of a substance to a mammal by means for inhalation are presented. Such a device may include a catalytic burner for creating an aerosol, a condenser for manipulating the aerosol in order to control the particle size of the aerosol, and a mixer for adding a substance to the aerosol prior to or upon release of the aerosol from the device. Such a device may be used, for example, for pulmonary delivery of substances, such as drugs.